Students who select to do the practice based 60 credit Project (IM201) are not required to do a research methods module. They will develop research methods knowledge as part of their learning on the remaining taught modules

Students who wish to do a traditional 60 credit Dissertation involving data gathering (IM200) are required to either take one of our specified research methods modules or be able to demonstrate a good level of knowledge of research methods before being admitted to the Dissertation module. Students are likely to have achieved the latter through having successfully completed a research methods module as part of their studies at undergraduate level to support their undergraduate honours dissertation in their degree in a relevant subject area.

Students who, on entering the programme, are unsure about whether to take the Project or the Dissertation and have not successfully completed a research methods as stated in the paragraph above, will be advised to take a research methods module in one of the optional slots.

All students will be counselled on their decision to select a research methods module at induction and at various stages during the academic year by the Programme Leader and in discussions with their Personal Academic Tutor.
